SCIENCE & EXPERIENCE MATTERS

Roasting vs Extrusion

Unique method used to process pet food

"We use a unique new method to process our food. The first step is where we take fresh grains and put them through the process of roasting. In this process we expose the grains to a high temperature for a short amount of time. This results in a well cooked, highly digestible product where the digestibility is higher than in most extruded products. It also results in a grain with a very high palatability and a wonderful aroma.

"Shortly after the roasting process, while still hot, we shape the grains. It either gets rolled, ground or remains in its natural shape. Compared to extrusion this process is not aggressive and it also has the advantage of preserving the natural characteristics of the grain with added nutritional value. This is definitely the method of choice between extrusion and roasting.

"In the second process of manufacturing we take the roasted grains, mix them in different ratios and then shape them into pellets. In the pellets for instance, they are mixed with dried vegetables and then shaped into a pellet.

"In the case of the fruit chunks/bits we mix the roasted grains with dried fruit which results in a very unique and palatable product.

"The second process of shaping the pellets is done at a low temperature, which allows us to add a variety of products. We use a variety of natural plant extracts that results in a food that supports the health, wellbeing and also promotes superb plumage.

"This is a unique manufacturing process with phase one being a hot process and phase two being a cold process, therefore this gives us the opportunity to manufacture a food where the nutritional value is in some instances higher than with extrusion, a much more natural product where the natural texture of the raw materials are kept, resulting in a variety of natural looking grains, which is more appealing to the bird owner and the bird itself."

Feeding guidelines

The Petline range is a balanced diet for parrots. It is one of the most natural balanced bird foods available on the market. All additives like vitamins, amino acids, spirulina, anti-oxidants, etc. are not exposed to high temperatures. The palatability is improved with the addition of dried vegetables and the natural nutty taste and smell of the roasted grains. The pellets are made to a size the parrots like.

The food can be used as the only source of food or in combination with each other, plus fresh fruit and vegetables. Make sure that 60% of your bird's total daily intake consists of a balanced diet like the Petline range.

How to change your pet's diet

There are many different ideas on how to change a bird's diet. Dr Deon de Beer recommends the following:

Introduce Animalzone food alongside your bird's current food for the first 2 days. Then gradually decrease the amount of current food while increasing the new food. After the 4th or 5th day, remove all of the current food and only feed your bird Animalzone products. Don't be alarmed if your bird does not take to the new food immediately, a bird will never starve itself. You can also add a little honey to the drinking water to enhance your pet's energy levels. You may note a positive change in the bird's attitude after a few months. You will also see a marked improvement in the bird's plumage.

What problems does poor nutrition cause?

Poor nutrition is the culprit of many problems that we see in parrots. Vitamin A deficiency, the high fat content of seed and nuts and fungal growth on seeds cause the most problems.

One of the first signs of poor nutrition is a dry and flaky skin, commonly referred to as feather dust. A dry skin can be very itchy and unfortunately a parrot might start pulling or biting his feathers since he cannot scratch to get rid of the irritation. Poor nutrition is also clearly marked by poor feather quality and stress marks on the feathers. Stress marks are seen as black lines across the feathers.

Poor skin condition can also lead to feather follicle cysts. The cysts normally occur on the wings where the primary feather struggle to grow through the thickened skin and cysts then form. The skin thickens due to a vitamin A deficiency. The beak of a parrot with a vitamin A deficiency is typically very flaky and tends to peel and in some cases tends to overgrow. The toe nails also tend to be very long and in some cases can be deformed.

Seeds must not be seen as bird food. Seeds such as sunflower seeds and peanuts are very high in fat and can lead to obesity in birds. This is commonly seen in birds such as Galah cockatoos and Amazons. They tend to develop lipomas which are seen as large lump under the skin.

Ongoing malnutrition due to high fat content will eventually lead to liver problems. These birds will have poor immunity and will develop general poor condition. In many cases this can result in change of feather color for example a green bird will develop yellow feathers and a blue bird white feathers, an African Grey will have some red feathers on the body and a cockatiel develops extremely dark yellow feathers. This should not be confused with mutation changes. In most cases it is only seen in older birds.

It is often seen in birds, particularly African Greys, that chronic sinusitis develops. The nostrils become blocked and in severe cases large nostrils develop with layers of debris. When this debris is removed it can leave the nostrils looking totally deformed. Birds like these are unfortunately very exposed to infection of the upper respiratory tract. This symptom is also an indication of a vitamin A deficiency.

Birds such as African Grey can become very old and cases where they are 50 years old are commonly known. My oldest patient was an African Grey of 77 years. With malnutrition the birds of 20 years are already old in appearance with clear signs of poor feather quality, a thick skin and chronic sinusitis. I call this the "20 year sunflower syndrome". With good nutrition an African Grey will only look old at 50 to 60 years.

You must agree that we all love our parrots and want the best for them. Why then do we punish them with health problems due to poor nutrition? Show your love with the correct food. Remember bird seed is not bird food!

*We support and promote the responsible use of sunflower seeds as bird food.

Helpful Tips

Enjoy the great outdoors with you feathered friend without the fear of fly-aways by using the Animalzone Bird Harness. A bird that is used to being handled will accept the harness quicker. It is much easier to work with a young bird, but if you are working with an older or difficult bird, here are a few tips:

- Ask someone to help you during the fitting the first few times.
- Fit the harness when your bird is hungry and use treats to distract and reward him.
- For very agitated birds you can use a towel to cover the bird's head.
- Immediately take your bird outside as a reward when you finished fitting the harness. Your bird will soon learn to associate the harness with the fun of going outside.
- Do not leave your bird unattended while wearing the Bird Harness.
- If your bird tends to bite everything, he may not be a good candidate for this harness.

STRING TOYS

Animalzone parrot toys are an excellent way to keep parrots entertained and help to trim their beaks.

The parrot toys are created from natural products such as untreated wood, rawhide, cotton rope and food grade colouring. The wood and rawhide are also treated with a natural disinfectant as a precautionary measure.

Directions for use

Unravelling rope can be dangerous, since parrots can become entangled. Parrots are clever and can undo the rope knot. Check the knot regularly and tighten.

Practical tips

- The greatest value of a toy lies in the ability of the parrot to destroy it. Rawhide, bark and soft wood are ideal for this purpose.
- Buy two different sets of toys for your parrot (e.g. coloured and uncoloured). Interchange the sets weekly to keep your parrot entertained.
- Some parrots are nervous and tend to be frightened of new toys. Slowly introduce new toys to these parrots by first hanging it outside the cage and slowly bringing it closer over a few days.
- Nervous parrots tend to accept uncoloured toys with greater ease.

All pet birds deserve to receive love and attention from their owners. Have your parrot's wings clipped correctly and allow him some freedom. It is not fair to keep them locked up in their cage at all times.
